

Cohen was knocked out of the box by the Indians and slaughtered by the Red Sox, but he whipped the Yanks impressively in his third and only other appearance last season, and his stock was boosted further when young Sam Holbrook, a recent visitor here, who is being counted upon to down a reserve catching berth, advised Messrs. Griffith and Harris that Cohen had more "stuff" than any of the boys he caught at Chattanooga, and those included were Armbrust, Leon Pettit (another 1935 recruit) and Linke, who spent part of 1933 in the Southern Association.

Griffith, it seems, is going after 'em young. If the batch of youngsters who'll bid for those nine hurling jobs measure up to Griff's expectations in ability, then perhaps there will be a surprise or two in store, for few baseball men are better qualified to impart slab knowledge than Uncle Clark, who was some shakes of a pitcher himself "back in the good old days."
