

Sellout Looms For

SPEAKING OF SPORTS

By BOB INGRAM

SUPERSTITION VITAL PART OF GAME

TAKE superstition out of baseball? There'd be as many negative votes as there are baseball players if this was put to a vote.

A national magazine comes out strongly against cures, charms and curses in its current issue. It points out the absurdity of depending on superstition.

Absurd or not, superstitions form an important part of the baseball player's life.

In all my ramblings, I've found but one man connected with baseball who didn't believe in certain signs or charms. And he was an umpire which probably explains this eccentricity. Every day was a bad one for him with the fans and players. Nothing would change his luck.

ANDY COHEN EATS HAM SANDWICH

OUR local stars have many and various superstitions. Can you imagine Andy Cohen eating a ham sandwich before a game? Or, for that matter, any time? The Jewish star used to frequent a little restaurant near Polo Grounds just before game time and partake of a ham sandwich to get base hits.

Andy never has his sweat shirt washed during the season, and last summer he got some publicity out of the fact that he never rolls his stockings as most baseball players do.

Syd Cohen won't take a shave before a game. Hy Myers spits on the end of his bat three times before he steps to the plate. And he believes in going thru the same gate to the ball park as long as his team is winning. Tillie Tilton had a yen for collecting hairpins. Every one he found meant a hit to him.

THE SAME OLD SHIRT MUST DO

IF Tom Seaton turned in a victory his first start of the season he wore the same sweat shirt all year. Asa Porter has worn a sweater until it is in shreds, yet he won't start a game unless he's got it on.

To lay his hat on the bed during the baseball season is a hoodoo to Bill Allison. He also always takes pains to lay his glove back-side up when he leaves the outfield to go to bat.

Jodie McCormick will never walk in front of the umpire and catcher when he takes his place at bat.

COLLINS AND HIS CHEWING GUM

EDDIE COLLINS has a rather famous superstition. For years he has carried a wad of chewing gum on the button of his cap. When he's at bat, the minute the pitcher gets two strikes on him he steps out of the box, takes the gum from his cap and starts chewing it.

It is said that Joe Dugan will never throw the ball back to the pitcher in practice or during the game.

Helen Oyler has a certain spot which he lays his glove down when he comes in from the outfield.

Hughie Critz of the Cincinnati Reds has a queer one. He always throws the opposing second baseman's glove two or three feet before he picks up his own when he is taking his position to play.

WILSON'S NICE WORDS

ANDY COHEN tells of a good one on Hack Wilson, the Chicago Cub slugger. Andy noticed that every time Wilson filed out to a fielder he would exclaim something about "Lucky Jew—" when he reaches second base.

Andy thought his remarks concerned himself, and wondered why he was to blame. Finally he asked Wilson and was told that it was his custom to make such a remark no matter who he was playing against.

John McGraw once capitalized superstition to win a tough series from the Chicago Cubs. The Giants were in a bad batting slump and had tried everything from switching caps to carrying rabbit feet to change their luck.

Knowing that a load of empty barrels means more hits, McGraw hired a teamster to haul a load of them past the clubhouse every day. The sight so inspired the players with confidence that they started hitting.

By Joe Williams

MULDOON'S HEALTH FAILING

* * *
GOOL

CORDOVA HOUSE P
FOR CO

Principals Win
ing For Impe
At Arr

BY BOB INGRAM
ANOTHER SELL
National C
seems to be jus
corner.

Promoter Nate
packed the fans
dines in a tin ca
Wally, and Pi
fought their secon
has visions of ano
Friday night when
and Pinky Urquid

The fight, outsi
quid-Wally bout,
more attention fr
than any recent fi
Tickets were place
day and many of
were grabbed by th

Hughes and Urqu
best match Cordova
the flyweight tourn
holds a 10-round kn
Wally and last week
Cruz around the rin

Altho Urquid los backers here believ
a better chance to who fights more at
who is not adver
punches.

Hughes, however,
beat Urquid by a k
has predicted as mu

Both principals
their heavy training
Both will have no
in under the weigh 114 pounds.

The fans are res
interest for the se
fought between Al
and Joe Branson.
pressive showings fights. They have

Tickets are on sal house Drug store at Hussmann. Simon
Popular Dry Goods
handling tickets.

Chato Ponce

Danny Ponce, Fil
son, and Chato Lar weight, will meet
main event in the Juarez Sunday, P
Martinez and F. Bl
Frisco Joe will f