

GIANTS DETERMINED TO CAPTURE AS FLAG FANS CHANGE ATTITUDE

THE old El Paso spirit is catching hold of baseball and the Giants, encouraged by the attitude of the fans during the Fort Bayard series, are determined to plug through the season and cop a pennant, provided that the same sort of support is forthcoming in future.

All of the players spoke highly Monday of the changed attitude on the part of the fans.

"The support that we're now getting is very encouraging," said manager Tom Seaton. "I believe that from now on we'll have a winner."

"The town seems to be behind the team at last," said Brandy Brandenburg, centerfielder. "We showed them in the Fort Bayard series that we can play winning ball when we have the support. I think that El Paso is going to stay right with the club from now on."

"I couldn't ask any better support than the fans gave me in the first game Sunday," said pitcher Ranney Young. "The boys also were on their toes."

Every other member of the team expressed the same sentiment, and the feeling of discontent that was apparent a few days ago had completely disappeared.

Some night this week a council of the men who are directly interested in keeping the team in the league and winning this year's flag, will be held. At this meeting plans will be held for encouraging further support of the team among the citizens of El Paso.

For the first time in years, El Paso looked like a real baseball town Sunday. The fans were solidly behind the team, and the oldtime ragging that has always been an unpleasant feature of league baseball here, was missing.

El Paso plays the Chino Twins at Chino next weekend. The following week El Paso meets Gandil's club at Dudley field. That gives El Paso two whole weeks in which to point toward the Chino series and try to eclipse the attendance mark made in the Fort Bayard series.

Tickets will probably be printed at once for the Chino series, and placed on sale.

Against Chino, El Paso gets everything that it takes in over $300. This means that a $2000 gate would give the El Paso club $1700 and go far toward solving the financial problem, at least for several weeks to come.

Gandil's team is one of the most colorful aggregations in the league, and in its first appearance here proved itself a match for the El Paso aggregation.

One of the reasons that El Pasoans are now rallying to the club is the presence of Sidnev Cohen in the lineup. Sid is probably the best liked athlete ever turned out at high school, and many El Pasoans will go to see him play who don't care a thing about the game as a whole.

MINES SPORTS TO BENEFIT BY APPROPRIATION

Local School May Get Full-Time Athletic Director.

If Gov. Moody signs the School of Mines appropriation bill it will mean that for the first time in its history the local school will have a full-time athletic coach.

One of the provisions allowed for under the proposed budget for the school is the employment of an athletic director, according to dean John W. Kidd.

In the past the school's football and basketball teams have been coached either by some outsider who has been retained on the side or by a faculty member who has lent part of his time to the business of handling teams.

The new arrangement, if realized, will mean a great stimulus to athletics at the Mines. The powerful elevens the school has turned out in former years under adverse conditions are only indications of what might be done in an athletic way with the proper amount of coaching and under proper training conditions. Better training facilities would, of course, be made possible under the new financial arrangement.

If the bill is signed by the governor, the board of regents of the University of Texas, of which the local school is a branch, will meet and settle the matter of obtaining a coach to begin work next football season, according to dean Kidd. The meeting will not come before July 1 probably. Coach George Blanton Powell, math teacher at the Mines and football coach, resigned at the close of the last grid season, and as a result the school has let athletics alone since then, making only a little effort along baseball lines.

A majority of the players from last year's grid team will report back next season and with the addition of new students which the advantages of the appropriation may attract, the Orange will probably have the rosiest lot of material for a coach to work with, could be wished for.
