

"Just to show you how complete our slump is," related Bucky, later. "I got into an elevator and even that thing got stuck. I can't go anywhere, it seems."

Rookie Syd Cohen, who has been a flop as a pitcher for the Nationals, almost got a chance to show athletic prowess in another line of endeavor in the Tigers' eighth inning today. Al Simmons had just pumped out his second home run of the day off Cohen and Marvin Owen, the next batter, was hit by a pitched ball.

Accusing Cohen of deliberately trying to dust him off, Marv started for the box, but thought better of it and trotted to first base, while Kuhel, Kress and others started to form a circle about Cohen.

Prodigious Wallops Fruitless.

FOR hitting one of the best balls of the year Carl Reynolds got nothing better than a "1-for-0" line of type in the box. Reynolds, batting for Whitehill in the seventh inning, teed off on one of Roxie Lawson's pitches and sent a prodigious fly to Simmons, who ran a country mile, backed up against the center field wall, and reached high to haul down the drive at the 409-foot mark.

The same drive, pulled to left field and hit in Griffith Stadium, would have gone more than half way up in the bleachers.—F. E. S.
